

Wigs and Head Coverings

Hair loss will probably be the first side-effect you experience. It occurs about two weeks after you begin radiation therapy. Hair loss usually occurs over the area being treated, but some people lose all of their hair. Hair loss is sudden, and it usually falls out in clumps over a short period of time. This can be very upsetting unless you are prepared for it. Hair loss is usually temporary; your radiation oncologist can advise you about this. Your hair will begin to grow back within weeks to months following therapy, but the new growth might not be the same texture or color as your original hair. Permanent hair loss over the area being treated can occur with higher doses of radiation.

There are various options available to those who are facing hair loss. Some people may feel more comfortable choosing a wig, others will choose a head covering, and some may even request that something be custom made for them. Whatever the option, the goal is to be comfortable and create a natural look.

To help with expenses and obtain reimbursement, consider asking your physician to write out a prescription and a letter stating this is a hair or cranial prosthesis (not a wig). This will inform your insurance company that this is for a medical condition, not a cosmetic one. Also, be sure the receipts you receive indicate this is for a hair or cranial prosthesis.

To minimize hair loss, cut your hair short before you begin treatment. This reduces the weight on the hair shaft. Satin pillowcases help lessen tangling while sleeping. When your hair begins to grow back, use an infant comb and brush set. Don't over shampoo your hair. Use a mild shampoo, such as a baby shampoo. Don't use harsh products on your hair, such as hot rollers, curling irons, hair sprays or dyes.

Enclosed are three categories of resources: 1) salons and stores 2) mail order and online companies and 3) wig banks, donation programs and free services. These resources contain a variety of items to choose from such as hair pieces, wigs, and head coverings. Each category lists contact information, services available, and the population they serve (men, women and/or children). You may want to consider obtaining a wig before treatment or any hair loss occurs. It would be a good idea to bring a recent photo of yourself to help in matching the wig to your own hair color and style. You may even want to consider having a friend accompany you for some added support. The stores and companies listed have experience dealing with this sensitive issue and should allow you plenty of time to try out various colors and styles.

Salons and Stores

Below you will find a list of salons and specialty stores which specialize in assisting people who are experiencing hair loss. They are listed alphabetically according to state. Some of the services available to patients include styling assistance, a variety of head coverings and hair pieces including wigs. Some

Wig Banks, Donation Programs and Free Services

A wig bank carries wigs that can be lent out to patients in need. Wigs are generally returned back to the organization cleaned and made available to another patient. A wig bank is a good source if you no longer need a wig and wish to donate it, or if you are in need of a wig. If you choose to acquire a wig, you may want to bring a photograph of yourself with your previous hair style or color to best match your natural look. Hair donation programs have strict donation guidelines so you should contact the organization before donating hair to be sure it is processed properly (these programs also offer free brochures explaining this process). Free services often are restricted to those within certain income guidelines and/or with demonstrated medical need. Contact the programs directly for information about eligibility requirements.
